SWITCHED BY THE TAIL OF A LIVELY CYCLONE FROM THE SOUTHLAND.

SLIGHT DAMAGE HERE

Farmers suffer loss along the Bay Shore—Fierce winds in Lower Delaware—Destructive tides in Chester River—Woodall Building Demolished

OT forgetting us, the West India cyclone, which was announced by the Weather Bureau on Thursday as coming this way on mischief bent, struck Middletown on Friday evening and blew things about as it lived through the greater part of the night.

The storm reached its maximum about 8:30 o'clock, when the flag-pole at the house fell, breaking the feeding wires of the electric light plant, and leaving the town in darkness. The damage to the wires was slight, and was repaired next day.

The large building near the railroad, known as the "Woodall building," was blown down. It was unoccupied, having been last used during the season of 1892 as a tomato cannery by Wells, Herring & Co. This building was erected many years ago by the late John Woodall, and was used for a time as a wagon and farm-implement factory. After Woodall discontinued business there, it was unoccupied for a long time. It belonged to the estate of the late William Green, and was the last of the trio of large frame buildings which at one time stood near the railroad, the other two, the "Delmar" and the "old store," having been destroyed by fire.

Many trees had branches broken off by the winds and a few were nearly uprooted, but the damage in this respect was much lighter than one could have anticipated, considering the fierceness of the howling hurricane. Several farmers along the Delaware shore suffered considerable loss from the rising waters, the tides being higher than has been known for many years.

Charles Schubert, of Port Penn, lost his whole crop of corn, it being swept away in the shock by the water. Vincent Moore also lost his corn in the field and several head of cattle.

At Smyrna many large shade trees were uprooted or injured, and several chimneys were blown to the ground. At Woodside Beach the beach was washed away for several feet, and at Bombay Hook much damage was done to the marsh hay stacked there for winter use. Collin's Beach is in a dilapidated condition. The water washed away about 100 feet of the roadway to the pavilion and did much other destruction. One of the buildings of George C. Rothwell was unroofed, and a number of buildings on the farm of John H. Hufferack, at Cedar Lane, were blown down.

A number of buildings in Wilmington were unroofed and the shingles, shavings and lumber were scattered all over the city. The storm was much more destructive in the lower part of the Peninsula than in this region. The house of Julian Wheatley, near Tipton, was blown down and his aged mother killed. His wife, who was in bed with a three weeks old babe, was probably fatally injured. The little one escaped injury. Two miles distant the houses of Barclay Smithers and Charles Green were wrecked. The sleeping inmates escaped by a miracle in their night clothing. Green's three horses and seven head of cattle fled to the marshes after the collapse of the sheds and were drowned.

The water fronts of the Eastern Shore towns were flooded, and wharves, freight houses and other property suffered much damage. Old residents at Chestertown say the tide there was the highest in half a century. The Chester river bridge was entirely submerged, and damaged to such an extent that it will probably never be repaired. A notice stating that the bridge is unsafe, and that travelers use it at their own risk.

The granary of Captain Woodall, at Georgetown, was flooded, and a considerable quantity of grain damaged. A board broke from the side of the building and it is reported that fully two hundred bushels of wheat ran out.

Tolchester was also badly damaged. The tide was eighteen inches higher there than during the August storm.

Jewelry Recovered.
The valuable jewelry recently lost by Mrs. N. J. Williams, and for which a reward of $20 was offered, was found in Mr. Williams' yard by Theodore Harlow, colored, and returned to the owner. The jewelry had been accidentally dropped from a window.

A MUSICAL.

A Grand Organ Recital at Forest Presbyterian Church.

On next Monday evening all the music lovers of Middletown and vicinity will, we are certain, assemble in the Forest Presbyterian Church, when the Young People's Society of Christian Endeavor will give an Organ Recital of unusually attractive character. The recital will commence promptly at 7:30 o'clock.

Professor Sheppard K. Kollock will preside at the organ. Professor Kollock is organist and choir master of the Grace Episcopal Church and the First Presbyterian Church, Washington Square, Philadelphia, and stands in the highest rank of the organists of that city. Our citizens will also have the very rare privilege of listening to Mr. George Russell Strauss, regarded at present as the finest baritone singer in Philadelphia.

The committee have endeavored to prepare a delightful, refined entertainment and it is obvious to all that considerable expense is incurred.

On this occasion the basket collection will not be taken, but plates will be found at the head of the stairs, and all attending this recital are expected to give a silver offering, certainly not less than ten cents, and twenty-five cents would be most desirable. The offering made at the last recital was not sufficient to defray the expenses and it is to be hoped that the lovers of good music will prove their appreciation by a generous offering on this occasion.

The following programme will be read with great interest:

PRISON REFORM

WORK FOR WOMEN AMONG THE UNFORTUNATES IN OUR JAILS.

AS OTHERS SEE US

A Timely Paper by a Bright Woman on a Subject Well Worth of Consideration by the Progressive People of Delaware.

RIENDS of prison reform who deplore the custom of keeping convicted criminals idle in county jails will be interested in the following extracts from a paper on "Jail Work," read by Mrs. N. B. Smith at the recent State Convention of the W. C. T. U. at Dover:

The unprogressive, unjustified, unchristian attitude of the people in regard to prison reform is a disgrace to our civilization.

The hardened criminal and impressionable youth of first offense are born companions; the misguided youth, who, under proper conditions, might become a respectable member of society, eagerly listening to the story of crime and adventure as it falls from the lips of the blackened and defamed. The thought is stamped upon his very soul, more indelibly every day, that he, too, is an outcast. The woman drifts lower and lower every day, amid such surroundings, until the last faint spark of womanhood goes out in the darkness of hopeless degradation.

Huddled together in misery, neglected by the world, despised and shunned by decent people, there they curse and plot and scheme against the society they regard as their enemy. This is the picture I hold up to you of what actually exists in our jails, and shudder at, for I know not how long.

What is jail work? Is it jail work for the superintendent to visit the jails every month? Is it jail work for the W. C. T. U. women to visit the jails on June 9, carrying flowers to the prisoners, singing, praying and then never seeing them again until the next year? Is it jail work to talk with them, and pity their condition on those periodic visits, and fold our hands, while this blot on our escutcheon grows blacker and blacker, until relieved by comparison with progressive states?

When these thoughts force themselves upon me, thoughts of how little has been accomplished in our jails, I have been almost ready to argue myself to the point of laying down my weapons, but for the voice of duty. I read of improved methods being introduced in other states, but I know of nothing we could call reform in our prisons in Delaware? The years go by, leaving their changes upon everything; manners, customs and laws change with time, but the jails of Delaware remain the same.

In Dover and Georgetown jails there are no books except the Bibles, and the friends. New Castle jail is better in this respect, having a small library. But books only serve to relieve the monotony of a very few in our jails. Our prisoners, as a class, are not readers of books. For them jail life is nothing but an existence of absolute idleness, sometimes for ten years. Work would be a more useful call reform in benefit to them, for, indeed, prison life in Delaware is a certain destroyer of both morals and health.

One man in Dover jail who has borne the enforced idleness for eight years, once made his escape, but upon being captured and brought back he was called reform in coming back anyhow as his feet were in such condition, that he could not walk far, nor could he use his hands at labor. Employment is what they need. Employment that will keep them physically strong, make them morally better, by dispelling gloomy thoughts, that will inculcate in their habits of industry, which will be a powerful factor in the reformation of even the worst man, besides furnishing with trades with which to begin life anew.

All this argument is met with a sneer and a word of disparagement. Punishment and nothing but punishment, is the popular notion in Delaware. But this chief object of it all should be, to reform and reclaim the fallen one, whose miserable condition is responsible for his unfortunate position. Our prisons are pointed at with scorn and derision by those living outside the state.

Not long ago the manager of an excursion made New Castle jail a special feature in his program of attractions, advertising that the boat would stop at New Castle on certain days, when the excursionists could visit the jail, view the prisoners, witness the whipping and other punishments in season. Sheriff Gould soon put a stop to this, but it only shows the light in which we are viewed by outsiders.

I was very much entertained and astonished a little while ago, in Dover jail, when one of the prisoners told how heavily the fact of his being in jail weighed upon him, and how he longed for the day when he would be free from the shackles of his prison life. He spoke of being away from his family and how hard it is to bear, and said he "If I live to get out, who will ever notice me again? I feel ruined already."

That was the point with him as it was with all of them, not to lose all sense of proper manhood. They know discharged prisoners have a hard road to travel, and that they get the least sympathy of any class of unfortunate people. Discharged without character, without credit, without cash. I can imagine no darker life than that in one of our jails, and how he served his time in New Castle jail there are 125 of this kind of pitiable humanity, in Dover jail.

IN FLORIDA.

A Delaware Editor's Opinion of the "Judge" Humphrey, editor of the Every Evening, is looking over Florida and writing some interesting letters to his paper from that state of oranges and incompatible climate. Regarding the orange crop of the season just opening, he says "the outlook now is for the largest crop ever produced in Florida." The estimate is placed between 4,000,000 and 4,800,000 boxes. In other words, "for every barrel of peaches the Delaware and Maryland Peninsula shipped to market the past season Florida will ship a box of oranges. The crop was damaged but little by the late big storm, the severest Florida has had in ten years. The estimate of the injury to the fruit does not exceed two per cent. Some very satisfactory shipments have been made to Europe, by way of New York, for which an average price of $3.12 per box gross was realized.

Evidently the "Judge" has not yet acquired a taste for guavas, of which he writes thus: "I have been trying to eat guavas, but one of them per day will more than satisfy me thus far. The guava looks like a small lemon, but tastes like a mixture of molasses and burnt India rubber. It is a taste that stays by you, too; after masticating a full grown and ripened guava you can still taste it the next day. I am told that very few like this fruit on first acquaintance but that usage soon brings a relish for it. We will doubtless soon come to believe, if we persist that the orange is a delicious fruit. But there are guavas and guavas. The yield of different trees is so varied in flavor, running from the insipidly sweet to the refreshingly acid, that one may, in a guava grove, select fruit suited to his own taste. The guava is not only a pleasing fruit to eat, but it is a most persistent bearer, yielding fruit constantly during eight or nine months of the year, and makes perhaps the most delicious jelly of all fruits.

Dover's New Well.

Middletown people who are hopeful of obtaining a more satisfactory water supply for themselves, will be interested in the success of Dover's efforts in the same line. The Index thus describes the test of the artesian well recently finished: "The town's new nine inch artesian well had its first test yesterday morning and was perfectly satisfactory. It has been attached to one of the large pumps for several days. At the test 52 gallons were pumped with ease in 15 seconds. With extra force 52 gallons were pumped in 14 seconds. Two gallons were allowed to waste in the flow through trough leading to the barrel. The capacity of the well was estimated at 300,000 gallons per day more than enough to supply the town's demand. The largest amount pumped any day was 220,000 gallons. The well will cost about $2,700. The old well on the creek side cost $2,700, and will not yield half as much as the new one. The water from the new well is of excellent quality.

Effects of Spraying.

During the past summer W. H. Moore selected a limb on a Raino apple tree in the orchard of Charles Jones, on North Broad street, for the purpose of testing the virtues of spraying. This week he picked from that limb about two and a half bushels of apples, ninety per cent. of which were perfect. The limb was sprayed four times with the Bordeaux Mixture, and the work was done by Mr. Moore's compounding. The apples on parts of the tree not sprayed were almost worthless, proving conclusively that the perfect fruit was the result of the use of the wash.

In almost every part of the country where fruit growing is pursued as a business the intelligent use of the insecticide is acknowledged to be indispensable. The Californians have made a success of fruit culture only by a persistent war on insects by means of the spray pump, and without it, hardly ten per cent. of any crop of pears or apples produced there would be worth the trouble and expense of raising.

Here on the Delaware and Maryland Peninsula it only needs intelligent care on the part of growers to produce as fine fruit of all sorts adapted to this climate as can be grown anywhere.

In this fall's meeting at Friar Park the managers are giving you another treat in the races.

A Word of Caution.

While the local department of this paper is in the temporary charge of its former "baldheaded" editor, all friends will be welcome to the sanctuary at any reasonable hour, but it must be remembered that one who is not a member of the society is not to private graveyard connected with the office, we will not be responsible for the fate of the man who recklessly asks: "What is the U. S. Senate going to do?"

Ex-Governor Groome's Estate.

Letters on the estate of the late James B. Groome, of Maryland who died intestate, were granted by the Orphan's Court of Baltimore City, to his widow, Mrs. Alice E. Groome, on Saturday. The bond was for $100,000, double the estimated value of the personal estate. Mrs. Groome was also appointed guardian for her daughter, Miss Mary E. Groome, the bond of $8,000 representing the estimated income from the real estate.

A Georgia Peach.

A beautiful specimen of this luscious fruit from a Georgia orchard, made its appearance at our office this week, and many admirers expressed a willingness to prove its qualities. It was the gift of a Southern cavalier to a Middletown lady, and made its long journey wrapped in cotton and carefully packed in a close box. Even the Delaware peach is not larger or more fragrant. It weighed 12 ounces.

Land Sales in Kent.

Sheriff Dunn sold last week the handsome green stone dwelling of Joseph M. Chambers situated on State street. Dover, to Dr. Thos. V. Cahall, of Frederica, for $5,800. Also the farm of John P. Donoho and Thomas Troy, consisting of

THE DOLLAR OF OUR DADDIES.

In 1848 the commercial world found itself seriously threatened with a gold famine. The appreciation of the relative value of the dollar, and the relative increase in the quantity of all other property necessary for the purchase of a gold dollar, and for that reason it had become apparent to the minds of many thoughtful people that serious contraction was imminent, such as would inevitably curtail the debt-paying power of the debtor class of people to a ruinous extent. This is made apparent to the mind of the plainest man by a simple illustration:

If I enter into a contract to pay $1000 in gold ten years hence, relying on the then existing relative value of that metal to all other property, to enable him to meet his obligation, and during that whole period of ten years that relation stands unaltered, he then will have made no mistake, and barring all other contingencies outside of such monetary relations, he will be ready to meet his debt at maturity. But, if during that period of ten years, it comes to pass that the world's supply of gold does not keep pace with the increase of population and expansion of trade, A will find himself under a contract which will oblige him to get together more property with which to purchase his $1000 than the condition of things required at the time of entering into his agreement, and his embarrassment will be in proportion to his want of disposing resources. It is a popular belief that gold has a fixed intrinsic value, independent of supply and demand, and without "variableness or shadow of turning." Such is far from being the truth. But to the contrary, gold, contemplated merely as a metal, stands precisely in the same relation to society and to man's needs as does all other property, and has an intrinsic value in proportion to the demand for it and the amount of labor required to produce it; and the only reason which may be assigned for the exclusive use of it as a standard of value, is that the experiences of the past have shown that it has seemed to be in such quantities that it has been less liable to fluctuation in value than any other object representing labor.
This was clearly demonstrated in 1852, when the gold famine, which seemed imminent prior to 1848, was turned into gold-plenty by the discovery of the gold fields of California and Australia.
Perhaps there are many who do not know or may have forgotten that, in the midst of the plenty of gold immediately following the California and Australia discoveries a large class of people sought the demonitization of gold on the ground that it was being depreciated by the plenty of it and could not be relied upon as a standard for sound money, and silver was looked to as the coming standard for honest money. But since that time silver production has largely increased and gold production has decreased. In 1892 the world's product of gold was $150,000,000, and at the present time it is little more than $125,000,000, and it is now claimed by some very reliable statisticians that the whole of the present product is being consumed in the arts and sciences. Since 1852 the population of the world has greatly increased, and along with it the volume of business and trade in every line has broadened and expanded in proportion to the mighty advance of modern civilization and inventive genius, and on the other hand the annual gold product of the world has decreased over thirty per cent. In the face of these facts will anybody undertake to say that gold has not depreciated in its relative value to other property since 1852?
Will any body undertake to seriously argue that gold alone is stable and silver and all other property have depreciated? Will any body with ordinary reason insist that the relative low level of price to which all property has been tending for twenty years, is alone caused by overproduction or cheapened production? But on the other hand, is it not absolutely true that, while cheapened production and over production is responsible in part for the relative depreciation of value, the appreciation of gold is equally changeable for the other part?

It will be well for those who are discussing this matter to constantly bear in mind that the value to-day, of the gold dollar, relative to the intrinsic value of the 16-to-one silver dollar, is very near the same proportion as the world's product of gold in 1852, stands to the world's product of gold to-day. Thus showing beyond the possibility of refutation, that the gap between the silver dollar of to-day and the gold dollar, is caused more by the depreciation of gold than by the depreciation of silver, and the only deduction that possibly can be drawn from these facts, is that the 16-to-one silver dollar stands more nearly representing the standard of value between gold and all other property as it stood in 1852 than does a gold dollar represent that standard to-day.

How can the single gold dollar be honestly taken as the only standard measure when the world's thirty per cent. less than it was then, making no allowance for increase of population, and the ever increasing consumption of gold for the arts and sciences? Of the two evils, gold monometallism or an extreme silver measure, we see little difference as to the ultimate effect, for either would ultimately work ruin, but gold monometallism would bring it about more quickly.

We can see no good which may ultimately be derived from purchasing silver bullion and hoarding it in the U.
S. Treasury, and we therefore believe in the unconditional repeal of that law, not that it has done any mischief, but simply because the people are apprehensive that it may cause trouble. An International agreement is the only ultimate cure for the present condition of things, and it remains for this government to enact such laws on this matter as will guarantee, in some measure, our own safety till that object may be accomplished. For if we mistake not, those Euro. can governments now in the scramble for gold as their only means of safety will ere long find themselves on a fool's errand, for when it comes to that, this country may be dependent on as being fully able to compete for her share of it. Without any desire to criticize for the sake of criticism, we cannot but think if Mr.
Cleveland is the broad and comprehensive statesman that many seem to think him to be, he would, in his special message to Congress, not have contented himself with merely recommending the repeal of the Silver Purchasing Act, but would have recommended a substitute that would have given some assurance to those, who of his own party, are unalterably for bimetalism in some form or other. If he had done this he would not have to-day a Senate making faces at one another and calling one another liars and other hard names, while the business interests of the country are fast getting into a condition that portends as chaotic a condition as the U. S. Senate is now in, and it is only fair to say that Mr.
Cleveland is more responsible for this condition of things than any man in his party, for none of those scandalous alliances that were made in a number of the States were made without his full knowledge and consent, knowing that it was only a trap for vote-getting.

THE OHIO CAMPAIGN.

The Every Evening is endeavoring to prepare its readers for a rousing majority for McKinley in Ohio, by stating that there is very little interest fastened in the election outside of the state.

What is the matter with our esteemed contemporary? Is it so aborted in the silver question and the tariff that it does not know that the people of the whole country have their eyes on the Buckeye State and are waiting the result with great anxiety to see what verdict the voters of that commonwealth will pass upon the present Democratic administration. With the Republican majority very greatly reduced at the last election when the fight was made on the McKinley tariff bill, and being the home of McKinley himself, it is with more than ordinary interest that the nation watches the contest in Ohio to see how she is pleased with the present condition of affairs industrially and financially. It is rather amusing to see the Every Evening preparing, in ordinary language, to hedge on Ohio.

SENATOR Voorhees has made a miserable failure as leader of the administration forces; and one thing more than any other has contributed to it, is the fact that no one has any faith in Vorhees' position on the silver question.
His present position is directly opposite to his past record and no one believes in his sincere conversion to the cause of good money.

IN THE absence of several members of the TRANSCRIPT staff for a brief season, the services of the "halcyon editor" of other days have been secured for which we are sure our readers are as grateful as we. It may be that the politics will show some deviations but as things are generally mixed up in the political world, that will only be on a line with the present situation.

PRESIDENT Cleveland's words of praise for the Republican Senators who have stood like a rock for the cause of unconditional repeal, are well merited, for no man ever stood firmer for the cause of good money than the majority of Republican Senators. It must seem somewhat strange to the bulk of the Democratic papers that the President should give such unrestricted praise to his political opponents, and is a convincing answer to the Philadelphia Ledger and other papers of that class; and to those who could never see any good in the Republicans, Mr. Cleveland fully appreciates the debt he owes to the Republicans who have stood with him in this matter, when the bulk of his own party have given him little if any support in his recommendations to Congress.

WASHINGTON LETTER.

WASHINGTON, Oct. 18, 1893.— Never was there a more distracted body of men than the Democratic members of the Senate are at this writing. This distraction has existed more or less from the first day of the extra session, but the absurd ending of the test of physical endurance ordered by Mr. Cleveland in his childlike belief that a vote on the Voorhees unconditional repeal bill could thereby be forced has made it worse than ever.
Consultation after consultation is held but they seem afraid to make a de-cise move. Some of them are afraid of their constituents, some of each other, some of Mr. Cleveland, and all of the Republicans. The physical endurance fight was won by the opposition of unconditional repeal, just as everybody knew it would be, because of the ability of the repealers to keep a quorum continuously in the Senate, and the efforts to settle the matter by a compromise may fail because a majority of the Senate cannot or will not agree.

The distraction has also apparently reached the administration, which is beginning to wobble in a very suspicious manner. While Mr. Cleveland shouts in the ear of Senator Voorhees, "Keep up the fight for unconditional repeal," Secretary Carlisle prepares a compromise measure which he has shown to several Senators and told them that the President would approve it if he could do no better. This compromise, which may at any hour be formally offered as an amendment to the Voorhees bill, or may not be offered at all, is a last and desperate attempt of the administration to have a say in duanial legislation. It provides for the purchase of 90,000, 000 ounces of silver during the next four years; for the repeal of the tax on state bank currency; for the coinage of seigniorage now in the Treasury, and for authority for the Secretary of the Treasury, at his discretion, to issue bonds to the amount of $150,000,000, to strengthen the gold reserve fund.
It is not believed that a single Republican Senator will support this compromise, unless the clause of repealing the state bank tax be struck out. There is another compromise measure under consideration which finds considerable support because it would, if enacted into law, give the people a chance to pass upon that portion of it dealing with silver a few months before it goes into effect. It provides for the repeal of the purchasing clause of the silver law to take effect July 1, 1895; for the coinage of the seigniorage in the Treasury; for the retirement of notes other than coin certificates below $10 and that no coin certificate above $5, shall be issued.
It also amends the present law for the issue of bonds so as to limit the times for which any bonds issued may run to five years, and the interest to three per cent. Of the two the last is unquestionably the best.

The Democratic Senators were considerably alarmed on Saturday by a rumor that the Republican Senators were tired of doing nothing and intended to go home, leaving them to maintain a quorum or to adjourn.
Careful inquiry among the Republicans proved the rumor to be without foundation further than that they are tired of doing nothing. That is true. They have a right to be tired; they are not consulted about any of the contemplated compromises, but they are prepared to do their duty and will support any amendment that meets their approval regardless of whether it may come from administration or anti-administration Democrats.

The Democratic members of the House Ways and Means committee meet several times a week in a room way down in the crypt of the Capitol and spend several hours. It is alleged that this time is being put in on the preparation of the new tariff bill, but this is far from being certain as there are numerous good reasons for the belief that the members of this committee will have little or nothing to do with the preparation of the tariff bill which will at some time in the future be produced as their work, but will in reality be the work of men under the immediate personal direction of Mr.
Cleveland. Chairman Wilson is gradually extending the time in his public predictions of when the bill will be reported to the House. In his latest interview he says it will not be reported before the first week in December. It will be reported whenever the boss directs that it be reported and not before, and just when that will be it is doubtful whether any one, except the boss himself, knows.

Mrs. Gen. Grant and her daughter, Mrs. Nellie Grant Sartoris, spent last week in Washington, and although there was no official reception given them—they didn't wish it—they were entertained very pleasantly by their many friends, all of whom were glad to learn that Mrs. Sartoris intends in the near future returning with her three children to make her permanent home in America; also, that Mrs. Grant hopes to purchase a home for herself in this city.

Our Woman's

Housefurnishing for Comfort and Dressing for Becomingness.

OZY corners are receiving more attention of late than all the rest of the house put together. All the thought and energy of the feminine house furnisher being lavished upon this one portion of the domicile, to the neglect of the real comfort of the inmates.

Not so very long ago the fashion was to have in every drawing room, library or sitting room a table in the centre on which were all the newest books, a good lamp to read by, and even in some cases a work basket and some dainty bit of work. The first rumor of the coming trouble was when the craze began for bric-a-brac, and small tables of every conceivable shape were put about the rooms covered with various supposedly rare specimens of china and glass. Then the big table was pushed to one side and finally relegated to the upstairs sitting room. It was a man, so rumor says, who first invented a cozy corner. He bequeathed his wife to provide some place where he could be comfortable without having to sit on glit chairs and stare at a lot of china which made him think of a shop. He pressed so piteously for a sofa or anything pushed up into a corner out of the way that the wife yielded to his wishes. The effect of the corner was so good it was instantly copied.

Once started the contagion spread over the entire land, and now a home without a Japanese corner, a fishnet corner or a corner divan is not to be thought of. Artists have pronounced in favor of the cozy corner, and one studio I visited last winter was declared by every one to be simply a gem.
To my uneducated taste it seemed somewhat dreary and gloomy. The floor was stained, but there were no rugs upon it, and one or two chairs were placed in the most lonesome positions.
One corner of the room was hidden behind a high screen, and I was taken behind this screen and shown with the greatest pride a most wonderful—and I must admit most delightful—combination of divan, hanging rugs and pillows, and this constituted the beauty of the studio.

The object in to my mind is that the danger of a cozy corner is far more insidious and far reaching than has ever been acknowledged. More than two cannot occupy this sacred place, and indeed two are too many, for cozy corners require a very pretty pose, and it is much easier for one person to pose under the light of a pink shaded lamp than it is for two. Many young couples have been rushed into matrimony since this craze began after reading the numberless alluring articles upon how to furnish a house on little or nothing, the furniture of the parlor consisting simply of a divan, some portieres and a screen, with one fur rug. If the writers of such articles were once to be forced to live in a bare, dreary carpetless room, of which only so small a portion were habitable, I fear they would soon discover and admit that marriage was a failure.

Every man likes to be completely at his ease when he gets home, and a comfortable easy chair is infinitely preferable after a hard day's work than any artistic combination of divan por-tieres and hanging lantern. The light absolute necessary to the artistic perfection of a cozy corner is altogether too dull to read by, and the woman who adopts the fashions of fifty ago will find she has chosen a better part than she who spends time, energy and all her capital on picturesque effects of this barbarous fashion.

Warm coats and capes are already beginning to make their appearance, and the prevailing of fur trimmings shows that winter is close at hand. A very pretty coat in black satin is lined with ermine, which is turned back in front as revers. It has full sleeves falling over the hands and confined at the wrists with a hand of ermine, and similar fur edges them. The long basque is full at the back.

Medici collars are quite reinstated; indeed, all the winter mantles and cloaks have very high collars. In some of the sealskin cloaks they are almost exaggeratedly high, but it is a fault on the right side, for nothing gives such a sense of comfort and bien etre as keeping the neck thoroughly warm.
Fur capes have appeared again, but whereas the old fashioned cape clung closely to the shoulders, the new one is set into the neck band in full gathers much as if it were of velvet or cloth.

Lost and Found

A Story That Will Interest You—
The Lost Twin.

SEVENTEEN years ago this September since they told me I was an uncle, good old Doctor Peterkin, having procured for me the baby factory a pair of infants for my sister Nell.

I can remember a boyish indignation because the twins were girls, and that I was laid the doctor in the hall and angrily reproached him from his lack of taste in the selection of babies. He patted me on the head and told me with more amusement than I could see the reason for, that boy babies had been scarce and high-priced in those days, and that twin boys, especially, were a luxury few people cared to indulge in.

Aside from my vexation at their gender and some dim fancies about that mysterious place where pink-toed and helpless mortals were manufactured in regular course of trade, I can recall no other impression made upon me by the advent of the twins.

I did not shudder, or turn pale, or feel any presentiment of coming woe. There was no small present voice to whisper: "These twins are creatures of fate; beware the day." None of the powers that wait on mortal thought had the kindness to say to me: "In the year our lord 1893 you will live in Chicago, and these twins from the old farm will invade your life and fill your daily existence with hilarious peep-titles."

My wife gave me this telegram at the breakfast table:

We will be in Kansas City to-day, in Chicago tomorrow. Meet us at the depot.

ET AND NET.

"The twins are crazy," I exclaimed. "Why? You will meet them of course." "Of course! Oh, yes, of course. There are only a dozen regular trains, and heaven knows how many special a day arriving at three or four different depots from Kansas City. Of course I'll meet them. What could be easier?"

Well, having tried it, I am free to admit that a good many things could be easier. In point of physical exertion, for instance, it would be easier to pound stones or carry mortar; and so far as finding anything is concerned, it would be infinitely easier to search the stellar system for the lost planet than to rush about from train to train trying to meet a pair of freckled-faced and indefinite twins.

I did not expect to meet them at the rain, and you may be sure I did not; but when the shades of night began to fall, I went home and found them there. It is hardly necessary to say that they were financially in distress; and if any body happens to learn of a cab-driver opening a National Bank or starting a daily newspaper I wish the fact could be communicated to me. I am seeking information of that particular descendant of Jehu who brought the twins from the depot to our flat.

We were looking with breathless interest at the Parisian gowns in the Manufacturers' building, the twins and I, it being their first day at the World's Fair. I was trying to decide between the raptorial velvet of a perfect dream in a pale blue terra-cotta trimmed in a combination of fourteen-karat old gold and point d'appui lace, and another perfect dream of a thing with hand-work button-holes and six-rod basting thread. I had decided upon the latter, for its oriental attachments, as being the handsomest costume, when a hand was laid upon my arm, and a twily voice exclaimed: "Oh, Lord!"

"What's the matter?" I asked. "Oh, Uncle Sam, Net's gone!" cried Et, hysterically. "Gone where?" "Heaven knows where; she's lost. Oh, oh!"

"She will go home," said I. "She couldn't find the way home in a thousand years; and besides, Uncle Sam, she hasn't got a cent, not a single solitary cent. Oh, she's lost, and we must find her."

Then agonizing search began, for the girl was surely lost. We inquired at all the departments, we ransacked every foot of that vast region which lies between the peristyle and the western boundary of the pleasure. In vain.

We came down town and enlisted the services of the police force, and then, for we could do no more, and the shades of night were again rolled across the windows of the sky, we went home fagged, footsore, and dejected.

That unexpected twin was at home and had been for hours, as fresh as a daisy. She told her story, and for a reason I had I got the narrative complete in my photograph. It's the most connected story I ever heard. Here it is in full:

"Well, Uncle Sam, I was looking in the glass show-case at those lovely dresses, the loveliest things I ever saw, and I know heaven can be no finer, when I saw a man walking away, and there was a girl in a blue serge dress on his arm, so I surely thought it was you and Et and I went up and took him by the other arm and off we went."

"So that was how you left us, was it?" "Yes, and pretty soon I saw the man tickled nearly to death, and I looked up to him and said, what are you laughing at, Uncle Sam? and he looked down and says he, do I seem old enough to be anybody's Uncle Sam, and the girl, who was his sister, on his arm, giggled, hateful thing, though I must say she behaved just lovely to me, and I know where she's staying here in town and I'm going to call on her. She's from some place in Wisconsin."

"What did you do then?" I asked, as she paused a moment to take breath.

"Oh, don't ask me, please don't. I don't know what I did, do, I was so scared and crazy, and we all went back and looked for you, but couldn't find a sign of you anywhere, and then that fellow, his mustache is just too cute and curly for anything, said he would take me home, and I said no indeed, I would go by myself if he would lend me a quarter, for I didn't have any money and I liked to have died in my tracks from shame, and I'll bet that if I could carry my alligator skin and my chateaufort purse myself and not let Et have it all the time, I paid 65 cents for it, and on bargain day at that, so this fellow and the girl took me out and put me on the train and told me all about how to come home, and I am here all right, and you're to go to his hotel and pay him 35 cents borrowed money, a thing which I never had to do from a stranger before; his address is here on this card."

AUTUMN'S FAREWELL DANCE.

One bright Autumn day there was an universal rustle among the leaves and blossoms and feathery brown grasses that grew by the brook. There seemed, too, an unusual stir among the crickets and grasshoppers. What could it be that had set them to tuning their little fiddles so vigorously? The Southwest wind knew. Since every morning he had found about whispering a message to the birds, the bees and every living thing out of doors. This is the message he brought them:—"Mrs. Autumn invites you to a party to be given for our friends, the Birds, who are soon to go South for the Winter. The party will be given at Mrs. Autumn's country place, 'Out of Doors.'"

"Yes," said Mrs. Autumn, to her friends, "Spring gave the Birdies' Ball, and Summer has been made very happy by their songs. It will be a pleasure to me to give them a farewell dance." Mrs. Autumn's daughters, September, October and November, were to decorate the house for the party. Lovely September brought sheaves of golden grain, plumes of nodding golden rod and yellow corn.

"Oh, how beautiful, September!" cried October, coming in with her arms full of purple grapes and trailing crimson vines and scarlet leaves. Then, when November had added delicate brown grasses and scarlet berries, the house was beautiful indeed. "I must order a new gown for the party," said September. "My last year's gown was spoiled by the equinoctial storm." So she ordered one of yellow, trimmed with tassels of the Indian corn.

"I, too, must have a new one," said October. "For when November came last year, I lent her mine. How she looked in it! I every one said she was the most charming November ever seen."

"Let me paint you a gown for the party, October," said little Jack Frost. "I know your favorite colors." "Oh, thank you, Jack," said October. "You may indeed." So that night when the world was asleep, the little artist worked; and in the morning there stood October in a gown of crimson and russet, all dished with crimson and orange. "Now, Jack, do paint one for me for November. Perhaps we can persuade her to wear gay colors again this year."

With pleasure, said Jack. But when he looked in his paint-box he was so sorry. "Oh, November, he cried, 'I've nothing left but brown and white.'"

"Never mind, Jack," said November. "Brown is my favorite color." So November's gown was of soft brown, trimmed with oak leaves.

Soon the guests began to arrive. The Misses Poplar came first, all in lovely yellow. They were followed by the Misses Maple in crimson and yellow escorted by their brother, Mr. Swamp Maple in scarlet. The breeches, Chestnuts were there in gay colors; the Oaks came in last in dull crimson and brown.

And what music there was for the dancing! High in a tree sat our old friend, Professor Wind, leading the band. The Crickets brought their violins. The Bumblebees played the bass-viol, and the Woodpecker the drum. Grasshopper Green was there with his "dozen who boys" who were quite grown up by this time. They had changed their little green jackets for brown ones, and each carried his little lute under his wing.

The Katydids had been asked to entertain the guests by a story: "The story of Katy." But before the time for story-telling came, a slight difference of opinion arose among them as to something Katy did or didn't do. And they became so interested in discussing the matter, that they forgot all about telling their story; not one word did they say all the evening except "Katy didn't! Katy did!"

The birds fitted softly from spray to spray, saying good-bye to their friends. Their songs were not as loud and joyous as at the Birdies' Ball. Were they thinking of their empty nests? Were they thinking of the long journey before them? Yet, I know that not in the heart of one of them was a doubt that the kind Friend who had always led them, would guide them over land and sea, and bring them safely back.

What a merry time the dancers had! Grandmother Spider said it made her feel quite young again to see them. Mr. Nutcracker frisking in and out his hole, with his pockets full of nuts, said that this was his busiest season, and what would the little Nutcrackers do next winter if he did not work!

As the party was given in honor of the birds, they were the first to thank Mrs. Autumn, and say farewell. "We thank you, too, dear trees," they said, "for the shelter from sun and rain. We thank you, dear Wind, for rocking our babies so gently. We thank you, dear Grasses, for your help in building our nests. And we thank you, dear Earth, for the food we have had in abundance."

Then they fluttered away like a soft, brown cloud, to sleep with their heads tucked under their wings, and to dream of their long journey. As for the other guests, I really can't say when

A Genuine Claim.

Mr. Gladstone's Energy.
Among the old hands on the Treasury Bench, Mr. Gladstone has, of course, more than maintained his acknowledged supremacy by head and shoulders. It has, indeed, been a "Gladstone Session." In conducting the Home Rule Bill through committee he displayed almost a spirit of monopoly in regard to the speech-making. There was scarcely a clause, a line, or a word whose entire defense he would intrust to his lieutenants. Night after night he sat through long hours answering every amendment in strings of little, dazzling speechlets, soon breaking through the doctor's rule of retiring from the debate at nine o'clock, and at the end of the session more persistent in attendance than any of his colleagues. Never—we can say without fear of contradiction—has he reached to a higher level of sustained eloquence than during this session.

Whether we take his great speeches on the first, second, and third readings of the Home Rule Bill, his hundred and one like constitutional discourses in committee, his innumerable displays of wit and argument in the personal combats with Mr. Chamberlain, and, last but not least, his many important speeches on open questions like the opium traffic and the eight-hour day, he has shown the same unrivaled and unchallenged pre-eminence. This, indeed, is the great historical center of the session—the performance of Mr. Gladstone on the great stage at Westminster.—Westminster Gazette.
